Progress can be measured in many ways, as you'll discover on the pages of this annual report. Metrics are the guideposts we use to chart what we have achieved as a division and uncover where we can grow and improve.

Numbers play an important role in the division of Student Success and Well-Being (SSWB) because we have the honor and privilege of touching the life of every student who enrolls in and graduates from UCF.

At the highest level we tie our work to the strategic priorities established in our strategic plan, Unleashing Potential, and the metrics used by the Florida Board of Governors to assess the university's annual performance: the 12 preeminence metrics and the 10 Performance-Based-Funding (PBF) metrics.

At the division level we use data to further our mission to transform "aspirations into achievements." From the moment our students decide they will be a Knight, we act on the fundamental belief that every student who starts at UCF will finish at UCF.

We have multiple programs, practices, and policies in place to help us achieve these strategic goals. While we have accomplished significant progress in the last ten years, we will have to work smarter — and maybe even harder — to attain our goals. We are not deterred by the recognition that our performance on key metrics has not shown the improvements we anticipate. Nevertheless, we are confident that we have consolidated a new division that is well positioned to take this university to the next level.

In this report you will read of many remarkable achievements and progress toward our goals. The report touches just the surface of what we do to promote student success and well-being. What truly inspires us is difficult to capture in a few data points. A spirit of pride, optimism, and confidence characterizes this great university, and those intangibles are a product of an institutional culture of caring that this division models every day.

Thank you for taking the time to review the collective impact this division makes in students' lives.

Charge On!
